

Linda Hogan

*Native American Author,
Novelist, Poet and Memoirist*

Keynote Speaker for Women's History and Awareness Month

"Women Watching Over the World"

Tuesday, March 6, 2012

5:00 p.m.

The Theatre

Doudna Fine Arts Center

Admission: Free

"Linda Hogan can teach us a generous vision of nature. In her poems, novels, stories, and nonfiction, she shows a love of the created order that exists not at the expense of love of humanity, but as a fuller expression of that love. To be human, according to her vision, is to be situated on the planet, and to be sensitive to its moods, its angles, its secrets, and its kinds of life—animal, vegetable, and even mineral. Hogan possesses the skill of standing in awe of the earth's mysteries, a sensitivity to the grace present in nature. Her language—careful, polished, serene, and strange—shocks us awake to the grandeur around us, and reminds us of our part in it. Hogan shows us our smallness, yes, but also our giftedness, our blessedness. This is not a fearful smallness, but the smallness of humility before something wildly, mightily alive." – Image Journal

Sponsored by

The Women's Studies Program, the Center for the Humanities, and the University Board

